CONTENTS

Editorial
Peter Forrest
Page 3

Rapporteur's Report
Sarah Titchen
Page 4

Dream the Impossible Dream? Shared Heritage, Shared Values, or Shared Understanding of Disparate Values?
Isabel McBryde
Page 8

Regional Assessment of Cultural Heritage:
A New Approach Based on Community and Expert Partnerships
Sandy Blair and Sue Feary
Page 15

The Different Significance of Historic and Prehistoric Sites Associated with Gold Mining Projects in the Northern Territory
Philip Hughes, Scott Mitchell and Marjorie Sullivan
Page 22

'Censorry' Perceptions - Editing the Final Chapter of Kakadu History
Richard Mackay
Page 27

Aboriginal Aspirations for Heritage Conservation
John Ah Kit
Page 34

A Transient Heritage: Trepanging Sites on the Cobourg Peninsula
Scott Mitchell
Page 37

Conservation of Marae Structures
Dean Whiting
Page 47

Conservation of Cultural Diversity in Indonesia
I. Wayan Ardika
Page 50

Anglo-Australian Law and the Aboriginal Cultural Heritage
Peter James
Page 52

Aboriginal Burial Conservation in the Murray-Darling Basin
Jeanette Hope
Page 57

Cover Photo: The ruins of Fort Dundas, on Melville Island. The fort was established by a British military detachment in 1824, and was the first European occupation site in north Australia. Fort Dundas has high heritage significance for all Australians. The site is on land now vested in its Tiwi traditional owners, who seek help with conservation action. The Tiwi say that their warriors forced the British to abandon the fort in 1829. It was visited during a "Managing a Shared Heritage" conference excursion (photo Peter Forrest).