

MARTOS PROJECT

An international workshop on Stone Conservation and Urban regeneration

DIADRASIS organizes the international workshop on Stone Conservation and Urban regeneration, for graduates and young heritage professionals from August 20 to September 30 2012.

The 'Martos project' project is an international workshop on Stone Conservation and Urban regeneration, for graduates and young heritage professionals. It will be held on the 16th century fountain of 'Fuente Nueva', at Martos, Andalusia, Spain. The fountain is a project of architect Francisco del Castillo, who had studied near the Italian Giacomo Barozzi da Vignola.

We are interested in inviting applications from recent graduate professionals or last year degree students in heritage studies (archaeology, architecture, conservation, urban planning & regeneration, restoration, art history, et al.).

The number of participants is limited to 16.

Applications should reach DIADRASIS by 20 May 2012 to ensure inclusion in our selection process.

For further information please visit the workshop website:

http://www.diadrasis.org/projects/martos/general_description.html